~Matuso Basho

A Strange Flower was commissioned by Marianne Gythfeldt, Lawrence Stomberg, and Holly Roadfeldt. The trio gave the world premiere on February 5, 2013 at the Williams Center for the Arts at Lafayette College.

It is both a privilege and a challenge to compose for musicians who can play anything. Having worked with all three musicians fairly extensively, I knew that each is an experienced and gifted chamber musician. I wanted, then, to give them a piece that would feature that aspect of their playing by writing what amounts to a giant cadenza. The piece is not (traditionally) metered, though there are some very rhythmic passages, and the musicians often react to beginnings and endings of another's phrases.

The title is not a direct representation of the piece--the sounds themselves are not what I would consider to be strange. It is, though, for a variety of reasons, an unusual piece in my catalog. I found the haiku while researching Basho's work for a song cycle I composed which set fifteen of Basho's haiku.

This work is, in fact, structured in the 5-7-5 syllabic form of a haiku. The outer, 5-syllable, sections are lyrical and revolve around the opening gesture. The middle section is more rhythmically active; its seven sub-sections are presented in a loose arch form.

Approximate duration: 14 minutes.

Performance Notes

All performers should perform from the score. In general, music which lines up vertically should be understood to occur simultaneously. Dotted vertical lines are used to indicate exact simultaneity. In other cases, such as the passages on page 3, the musical events are to occur in the same amount of time, but not necessarily be aligned metrically.

Diminuendos into rests should be performed al niente in all cases.

Phrase markings in potentially ambiguous passages are indicated with dotted slurs.

Gestures notated within boxes should be repeated ad libitum for the duration of the line connected to the box.

Rests in parentheses are used to indicate places where the performers may take additional time to re-coordinate the ensemble. The durations indicated are proportional, and not metrically exact.
